"Moina," the Author of "The Conquered Banner," "The Sword of Lee," and Other Southern Lyrics, to Lecture in Memphis.

During the war between the States, a deli-cate-looking Catholic priest acted as chaplain of a Mobile regiment. His amiability and christian bearing made him beloved by all. After the war, a poem styled "The Conquered Banner" was published above the nom de plume "Moina." Its effect was electrical, and struck a responsive cord in the southern plume "Moina." Its effect was electrical, and struck a responsive cord in the southern heart; besides, it was admired throughout the land and in England as a poem of remarkable power and pathos. "The Sword of Lee," and other poems, followed in quick succession, and these stamped the unknown author as a poet of a high order. It was soon discovered that the poet and the chaplain of that Mobile regiment were one and the same, and he was Rev. Abram J. Rvan. On account of these poems Father Ryan. On account of these poems Father Ryan won a place at once in the hearts of all true southern men, and to-day no one is nore respected or admired Many citizens have been trying to induce Father Ryan to visit Memphis and deliver one of is brilliant lectures, which lectures created o great a sensation elsewhere. In response o an invitation tendered him to lecture in his city for the benefit of the Sisters of the Good Shepherd, Father Ryan responded in the following characteristic manner:

St. Mary's Church, Fayerte Street, May 18, 1877. DEAR SIR-Your kind and flattering communication of May 3d has come to hand. It will be impossible for me to leave Mobile for will be impossible for me to leave Mobile for a long time to come, owing to the fact that, at my own request, in order to have more time to compose and gather my poems and other works for publication, I have been appointed pastor of St. Mary's and St. Xavier's churches. I have long desired to go to Memphis, having never been there. IN MEMORIAM.

Proceedings of the Cotton Exchange and Chamber of Commerce in Respect to the Memory of the Late M. D. Johnson.

The members of the cotton exchange and chamber of commerce met yesterday after-noon, in called meeting, for the purpose of taking action with reference to the death of M. D. Johnson, Esq., of the firm of Clarke, Johnson & Co., which sad event occurred on vesterday morning. The meeting organized by calling President Pettit, of the cotton exchange, to the chair. Mr. John S. Toof, secretary of the cotton exchange and chamber of commerce; acted as Secretary of the meetpointed by the chairman. The committee was composed of the following named gentlemen: Messrs. D. P. Hadden, J. J. Busby, J. R. Godwin, J. G. Lonsdale and Louis Hanauer. The committee retired, and after mature de-liberation reported back the following resolutions, which were unanimously adopted, as expressive of the sense of the meeting: The announcement of the death of Colonel

M. D. Johnson, which occurred this morning, has brought us together in common grief and sympathy. He was one of our most worthy and respected members. His business inter-course with us has been such as to have inspired us with confidence in and respect for his worth and integrity in all his dealings; an admiration for his justice and judgment in all his business transactions, and an esteem for him personally for his kind, gentle and social qualities. He was a man against whom naught can be said, but of whose business, social and moral virtues much might be said in commendation. He was public spirited, and though by reason of his retiring modesty and unobtrusiveness he did not assume to take a leading part in public affairs, yet in his own quiet, influential way, he always showed himself to be an active thinker and an earnest advocate of whatever twelfth inning. concerned the public good or the business welfare and progress of our city. He was emphatically a business man; his energy was untiring, his judgment good, and his dealings just. By reason of these qualities of head and heart he was respected and prosperous. He came to Memphis permanently to reside in 1870, and soon took his prominent and proper place in the respect of our people, and especially of the business men of our com-munity, with whom he came in daily contact. Our associations with him have enabled us to form a proper estimate of the man and a high esteem for his character. It is, therefore, not only suitable but desirable that we should have thus come together to testify our respect for his character and memory. Resolved, That we, the members of the Memphis cotton exchange and of the cham-ber of commerce, tender to his bersayed fam-

Resolved, That the exchange be closed on to-morrow (Friday), between the hours of nine and twelve o clock, in order that members may be afforded an opportunity of attending the funeral: upon the minutes of the exchange and cham-

SIXTY YEARS A PRIEST. Reminiscences of One of the Oldest Dominican Monks in the United States-He has Seen Every President, and Still Lives.

New York World, 21st: In the Dominican nonastery in Sixty-sixth street, near Lexington avenue, is sojourning for the present the oldest member of the order on this continent, Rev. Nicholas Dominic Young, who was born on the eleventh of June, 1793, near the mouth of the Piscataway river, Prince George county, Maryland.

A World reporter found him sitting at a window overlooking the flower-garden in front of the monastery, reading a paper and smoking a cigar, seemingly as hale and hearty as one half his age. He is somewhat bent, however, and complains of slight pains in his bones. He is short of stature, and not lacking in flesh. His complexion is florid and healthy. His hair is scant and snowy white, and his eyes are gray, though somewhat dim.

"Ah," said he, rising and offering his hand, "I am glad to see you. Spring and winter haking hands," he added with a lusty laugh.

"Si'd learn my low sit down, and let's hear. "Sit down, my boy, sit down, and let's hear what you've got to say."

"Why, what do folks care for an old

weather-beaten priest's story?" he asked when the reporter's errand was explained. "You want to know about my ancestors? My great grandfather (an Englishman) was a udge, and was sent out there in that capaci-He became a convert to Catholicism, and ty. He became a convert to Catholicism, and of course had to give up his job, as the saying is. England didn't allow Catholics to hold office in those days. He bought a tract of land which is now covered by a great part of Washington City. Well, he died, as in all likelihood i shall in the next thirty years, and the farm, which had the finest mansion in that part of the country on it, went to my granddad, Notley Young. He was born on it. When General Washington came to lay out the city of Washington my granddad gave up his farm, and the whole of south Washington is part of it. The general Washington is part of it. The general stopped with the old gentleman during that time, and provided that Notley Young's mansion should not be torn down till after his death; and there it stood right in the middle of a street until de died. My father, Nickels Young married one of the Fen. Nicholas Young, married one of the Fen-wicks, who were of the Lord Baltimore colony that came over and founded Maryland. Through her he inherited the farm in Prince George county, where I was born. my father took us out of a morning in the general pacing up and down on the veranda in front of his house. He had a habit of walking this way every morning with his hands behind his back. One day eight years old, there was to be a militia parade not far from our house, and General Washington was to be there to review the militia. I, with some other young shavers, went to the show to get some gingerbread more than anything else. However, the general was there. He rode a big white horse, but what took us boys most was his big but what took us boys most was his big cocked hat. I remember everybody was pointing out the general to everybody else

British. I suppose there are very few now-adays can say what I say." You must have seen all the public mer since Washington's Presidency."

"Yes, I've seen every President we ever had. I have seen Jefferson ride around the race-track in Washington as well as any sportsman. I saw Madison and Monroe do the same. Henry Clay used to visit my father. My, my! they're all dead."
"How came you to be a monk, father?"

asked the reporter.

"My uncle, Edward Dominic Fenwick, who was afterward bishop of Cincinnati, was a Dominican monk in the English monastery at Bornheim, Belgium. When the French, during the French wars, took the place they burned the monastery and took my uncle prisoner. He called their attention to the fact that he was an American citizen, and they let him go. Well, by advice of Luke Concannon, who was consecrated in Rome the first bishop of New York, but who never reached here, my uncle, with Fathers Wilson, Angier and Quit, came to this country to establish the order. Having wealth, my uncle nearly seventy years a Dominican friar. All my chums are dead; Miles became the first bishop of Nashville, Tennessee. I was ordained a priest on the eighteenth of December, 1817; so that I am nearly sixty years a priest. I ought to be quite good by this time, don't you think so?"

"What were your labors in those early days?" was the next inquiry.

"Uncle Fenwick and myself were sent into the State of Ohio, where we took possession of a farm given us in Perry county.

We worked like beavers, and pretty soon saw some result. In 1819 I established the first Catholic church in the city of Cincinnati. There were no railroads in those days, and have ridden about on horseback the circum-55 Union street. | ference of the earth two or three times, I reckon. I used to think nothing of riding from our Convent of St. Joseph to Columbus, fifty miles, of a night, through woods and swamps to visit the sick. I tell you, my boy, there wasn't any fun in being a priest in those days, but I liked it. "Did you spend all your time in Ohio?"

"Oh, no; I founded the first church in Washington, my boy, and built it right where my grandfatner's barn used to stand. It is the finest specimen of Gothic work in this country—the church of St. Dominic."
"How long have you been a smoker?"
"Well, ever since I became priest. My uncle was a smoker, and when we were thrown together in the wilds of Ohio we found smoking of great service on the road particularly at night. It solates me. I could not do without smoking. Father Young came to New York in 1826, A committee on resolutions was aped by the chairman. The committee was

A Chapter in the Life of A. J. Dexter, a Chicago Divorce Procurer-He Actually Chokes his Mother-in-Law.

A DIVORCE LAWYER'S WOES.

Chicago Tribune, 23d: During the last nonth, the Tribune has published considerable literature on the wees of A. J. Dexter, the divorce shyster, and his wife. It an-nounced Mrs. Dexter's application for a diorce, her withdrawal of that application, her renewal of it on account of a black eye given her by A. J., and it now comes forward with an account of a reconciliation between hus-band and wife, and the mysterious disapbearance of both. Saturday afternoon, Mrs. Dexter went out to take a little walk. She never returned. Her anxious mother went down Monday to Dexter's office, and found the two on the most friendly terms. She asked her daughter to go home with her. The daughter said she wanted to, but her husband wouldn't let her. Mrs. Dexter proceeded to dress herself and Mrs. er proceeded to choke, his mother-in-law During this operation Mrs. Dexter went out, Dexter telling his clerk to follow her. This e did, and returned in a few minutes and said something to Dexter, who quit choking his mother-in-law, and went off in pursuit of his mother-in-law, and went off in pursuit of his wife. His clerk told the mother-in-law that Mrs. Dexter had gone over to Pearshall's River house, on the corner of Clark and Kinzie streets, and Mrs. Dexter's mother went over there after her, but she was told she was not there. On reaching home she found that there had been left at the house what purported to be a telegraphic message. It was written on a Western Union blank, and included in a Western Union envelop. But eviclosed in a Western Union envelop. dently was never written by any telegraph operator. It read: Am at Pearshall's River house, corner Clark and Kinzle streets, North Side. Come over. CALLIE, Yesterday morning, Mrs. Harrison, Mrs. Dexter's mother, went over, but was unable to find her, and became all the more con-vinced that the message was a forgery. From there she went to Dexter's office, where she found two constables in the act of breaking in the door to take possession of all his goods and chattels. This confirmed her in the belief that Mr. Dexter had left town, taking with him his unwilling wife. It is Mrs. Harrison's belief that Mr. Dexter in-tends to kill this woman, inasmuch as he has quently stated that it was his intention to lo so, and then cut her up and put her bleeding remains in a large trunk which he car-ried around for the purpose. She says that Mrs. Dexter is aware of the wicked and criminal misdoings of her husband, and it is therefore for his interest to remove her. has inquired at various places for information concerning her daughter, but has been un-

V. B. WADDELL, Attorney-at-Law, General Land Agent, A ND Proprieter of the Abstract of Land Titles In Tunica county, Mississippi. Look to your land titles. I have now complete, a periect Abstract of Titles of all lands in Tunica county, Miss., as it was before portions of the same were taken for Tale and Quitman counties. This Abstract shows that there are very few perfect titles in Tunica county. Many of them are utterly defective, and there are scarcely any that are not clouded by tax-titles. In some instances I find that valuable plantations, about the titles of which the holders have entertained no doubt, are held by titles that would avail nothing before a court, either in prosecuting or defending a suit in ejectment. The defects in these titles may generally be cured if they are ascertained at once and the proper remedy applied. I will furnish abstracts on short notice, charging one dollar for each conveyance noted on the abstract. Payable
